TELEGRAPHIC TIPS.

A WAR BETWEEN POLES AND ROMAN CATHOLICS.

The Sleeping Preacher Talks for Four Hours—Curious Freak for Catching a Congregation—The Alleged Mabel Morton a Respectable Lady, Perfectly Sane.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A special to the Herald from San Antonio, Texas, says: Pauline Collier, 16 years old is a pupil in the children's district school, and rides back and forth to her home, 10 miles away, on a spirited pony. Yesterday morning, while riding leisurely along, she espied an enormous catamount crouching near her, preparing to spring. With great presence of mind Miss Collier seized the lariat hanging on her saddle, and by a dexterous throw encircled the animal's neck with a deadly coil. At a word from its mistress, the pony galloped off, dragging the savage monster to death. The catamount weighed 210 pounds.

A Church Row.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A special to the World from Buffalo says: The war between the Polish and Roman Catholic congregations at East Buffalo has broken out afresh and serious trouble is apprehended this time. St. Alberta church is again without a pastor and the congregation is up in arms. No mass was said to-day, and the parishioners have not visited their church during the day. Kneeling in silent prayer on the streets, they heaped imprecations on Head Bishop Ryan and Father Pitass, the pastor of the rival Polish church from which they are seceders. Last night the St. Alberta people had a mass meeting in their school house, and denounced the priest and bishop for causing their Father Mosejski and his assistant Father Greniski to leave when they were building a new $60,000 church and need priestly help. Father Pitass controls a Polish newspaper in which Father Mosejski is violently attacked. The latter is an old man, and instead of replying he sought Bishop Ryan's assistance, but the bishop declined to take part in the broil. Father Mosejski last night packed his trunk and returned to Detroit whence he came taking his assistant along.

Another Polish paper replies to the attack by calling Father Pitass a priest without shame, without character or without conscience, who delights to incite the Polish people to rioting.

Catches a Congregation.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—The World's special from Huntington, Pa., says: The Rev. John Koughman "the sleeping preacher" of Elkhart, Ind., preached to an Ammish Protestant congregation at Allensville, this county, Friday night. On going into the church he removed his shoes and his coat, and later on relieved himself of his vest. Before beginning he lay on a rough bench on the platform, and after a lapse of about twenty minutes during which time he seemed to be a comatose state, he rose to his feet and began a sermon which lasted four hours and ten minutes. He fell down exhausted although apparently not having finished his sermon, and lay unconscious for three quarters of an hour. During the sermon he preached in English, German and penna-German. He is 80 years of age, and has invariably for the past 10 years preached while asleep. Many of the Ammish people here believe he is shamming. Hundreds of people were turned from the doors.

Who She Is.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A special to the Herald from North Adams, Mass., says: The alleged Mabel Morton of North Adams, who has gained some notoriety of late by sending to B. B. Osler, the crown prosecutor of Birchall, a letter in which she claims to have killed Benwell, is alleged to be Mrs. Maria Le Baron, of Hancock, Mass. Mrs. Le Baron was visiting friends in this city at the time Birchall was there, and was accustomed to talk very much concerning it. It is alleged she was observed to mail a letter which was received by Birchall. She shortly after left for her home. She is the wife of a respectable farmer of Hancock and is perfectly sane

Will Not Resign.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A special from Springfield, Illinois, to the Tribune says: Robert Lincoln, minister to England, who came here yesterday to place the body of Abraham Lincoln, jr., in the tomb of President Lincoln, referred to the report that he was to resign his post as minister to England with evident annoyance. "You may say," said he, "that there is nothing whatever in the report. I am simply here on leave of several months, and at the end of two months shall return abroad to attend to my duties. How such a report got into circulation is beyond my comprehension." Mr. Lincoln has gone to Washington to attend to matters connected with his mission. He will soon return to Chicago where he will join Mrs. Lincoln, who is at present ill at Mount Pleasant, Iowa.

Slavin and Corbett.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—The challenge to Slavin which Corbett issued recently has created considerable stir in sporting circles. One of Corbett's friends in this city was telegraphed to a few days ago by the directors of the Olympic club of New Orleans asking if Corbett would be willing to fight Slavin there. To this Corbett authorized an answer that the chief consideration with him would be a suitable purse. If the Olympic club made a satisfactory offer he would accept. Last night the following dispatch was read: "New Orleans, 7, to Jas. Corbett, Olympic Club directors. Meet and decide this evening what purse to offer. (Signed) Chas. Noel, secretary Olympic club."

A Fighting Frenchman.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—John Gregore, a Frenchman, was arrested to-day on the complaint of Vicount Paul Dubsac, Consul-General of France, who alleges that the prisoner called yesterday at the consulate and threatened to kill all representatives of the French government unless they paid for his room and board. Gregore, when arraigned at the Toombs, denied the charge but was locked up. Prisoner gave his name as Justin Gregor, a captain of artillery in the French army and a graduate of the polytechnic school.

A Sensational Case.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—A special to the Herald from Boston says: The people of South Acton and vicinity are busy with a sensation. James Tuttle, a wealthy storekeeper 73 years old, is the defendant in a suit brought against him by Arthur Hughes charging him with alienating the affections of his wife. The formal allegation is supported by a declaration by the plaintiff of most immoral acts on the part of Mr. Tuttle and Mrs. Hughes. The action is for civil damages amounting to $30,000. A man named Hearne says he saw the couple together in a corn field and was within twenty feet of them when the alleged occurrence took place. Mr. Tuttle, whose age and infirmity are in strange contrast with the charges of Mrs. Hughes, admits of going to the field with her, but at her request to get some corn, but admits nothing further, in fact denies it stoutly and declares that his accusers are after some of his money which they shall not get.

English Capital Still Available.

MANCHESTER, Nov. 10.—As anticipated some time ago, Messrs. Rexiach and Watson, of Lester & Co., Limited, who have just returned from New York, deny that they ever made the statement attributed to them by the Philadelphia Inquirer in an interview which was cabled to this country through a news agency. They were asked if English capital would still go to the United States after the recent elections. Rexiach and Watson replied that they had made careful inquiries and that the national feeling seemed to be in favor of protection. English capitalists would therefore go to the United States.

FROM CASSIAR.

A Party of Miners Arrive from the Diggings in the North.

The steamer Mexico, which arrived from Alaska last evening, called at Wrangel on the way and took on a party of miners, consisting of Messrs. Metcalf, of McDames Creek; Jas. Porter, Dease Lake, and McLane and Mat Richards, of Dease Creek. Mr. Metcalf is an old miner, but of late has been managing Messrs. Galbraith, Grant & Cook's store at McDames. He says the summer has not been an exceedingly profitable one, although the miners are fairly satisfied. Prospects were not bright on Quartz Creek, although the Chinamen continue to take out fairly good wages. Five white men on McDames Creek only made "grub" during the summer. He is of the opinion that the diggings have been pretty well worked out. A company has taken up a new claim on McDames, which they intend to work with hydraulic machinery next year.

Judge Sheppard, who took up a party and a lot of machinery to Middle Creek in the spring, has done very well as far as can be heard, but he is very reticient. He had his ditches and machinery in working order when Mr. Metcalf passed down, and intended to wash up in a few days. Seven new clearings have been taken up on the Stickeen, among them a very profitable looking one by Mr. Carl, who has got good backing, and intends to prospect it for all it is worth. The beach is a high one and a good flow of water is obtainable.

Gardening on McDame's creek is now becoming quite a business among the Chinamen, who during the past summer raised over 200,000 pounds of potatoes, and a lot of other vegetables.

A large number of miners had come into Telegraph Creek camp for the winter when Mr. Metcalf passed that place, and others will come in before the winter closes them in. From that place to the coast, a distance of 72½ miles, the trail is in pretty bad condition, and needs immediate attention. It is frozen over at present and consequently was not very hard traveling, but when the frost goes it will be almost impossible in some places. The party will stay here for some time, and return to the diggings ready for work in the spring.

Rejoicing on Pandora Street.

The programme for the social at the First Presbyterian Church this evening is varied and interesting. Some of the best local talent in the city will render the following:

Opening anthem......"The Lord is my Shepherd."
Solo....."One sweetly solemn thought."
Solo....."O Rend your hearts."
(From the Oratorio of Elijah.)
Solo....."Glory to Thee my God this night."
Solo....."Arm, arm ye brave."
(From Judas Maccabeaus.)
Solo and Chorus....."How lovely is Zion."

Crashed Through a Window.

Yesterday morning a horse attached to a butcher cart, belonging to the B.C. Market, ran away down Yates street. The driver saw a lady crossing near the corner of Langley street, and with great presence of mind pulled the runaway animal on to the sidewalk and the lady escaped. The wheel of the cart crashed through Moore & Co.'s drugstore window, however, and wrecked it completely. A quantity of sponges in the window were ruined, being filled with bits of broken glass. The horse was stopped on Langley street without further damage.

The Miners' Case.

The six Wellington miners who some weeks ago were convicted of besetting and watching No. 5 pit at Wellington, were this afternoon brought before Chief Justice Begbie for sentence. Provincial police officer Stephenson gave evidence to the effect that the miners under conviction had since their trial taken part in processions.

On a judicial point raised by Mr. Wilson, the Chief Justice found he had no jurisdiction, and therefore could not give judgment.

OF INTEREST TO YOUNG MEN.

Sermon by Rev. Percival Jenns to Young Men Last Evening in St. John's.

Yesterday marked the opening of what is known as the International week of prayer in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in Canada and the United States, and the secretary of the local institute asked Rev. Mr. Jenns to make reference to the fact in either his morning or evening service. Ever ready to do a kindness the reverend gentleman devoted a whole sermon to the needs of young men, choosing for his text Matthew vii., 24, and three following verses. Although the words of the text were not addressed to young men especially, they nevertheless applied to them, for though we nowhere in the New Testament find Christ addressing young men particularly, we know that the needs of Christians, whether they be young or old, are alike. There is this difference that youth is the time of building or raising of a superstructure which will be to the honor and glory of God, the honor of man, the benefit of the state, or it will be one of ruin and despair for young men. The architect asks himself the question on what foundation shall he build before he considers the structure he is to raise upon it. In the Christian's case the Lord has set aside all difficulty in the matter of choosing a foundation. Now this religion of ours is either true, or it is false. If it is false, it is the most monstrous fraud that ever was palmed off on suffering humanity; but if, on the other hand, it is true, we cannot ignore it. We must either acknowledge it is a fraud, or it is God's eternal truth. A study of the great teachers on any subject, on philosophy, morality will will find that those teachers represent their subjects as everything and themselves as nothing. But Christ is everything. Having made up his mind as to the foundation, the next question for the young man to consider is the superstructure. Here again the Supreme Architect has smoothed away all difficulty in the matter of choice by sending His Son as the ideal for man. His is the ideal for young and old of both sexes. Christ's religion is not a religion for the learned only, it is equally for all. If the young man will use his own faculties of observation, he will soon find out for himself whether Christianity is true or false.

With regard to the Y. M. C. A., any young man who joins this association has decided to build upon the Rock of Ages. The preacher would strongly reccommend every young man to study the natural sciences. It might be that he would be dissuaded from this course on the representation that some of the leaders in science are infidels. As well might one be dissuaded from eating beef and mutton because some men are gluttons. The greatest scientific men such as Sir Isaac Newton, were humble Christians. This satisfied the preacher. It seems a pity that any young man should go through life without knowing something of the marvellous canopy overhead and of those mysterious worlds which surround us. Then there is our own world; is it right that we should go through life, short as it is, without learning something of this earth which we inhabit. The Y. M. C. A. affords opportunities for the improvement of the young man. It has a good library; it is well lighted and heated; lectures are given frequently on good subjects, and lectures stimulate enquiry. There is a good gymnasium, and indeed there is every inducement there to enable a young man to lay a good foundation on which to raise a worthy building. A believer in home influences himself, the preacher did not advise any young man with a good home to forsake it for other attractions, but still if he must go out, there could not be a better place than the Y.M.C.A. The fee for membership is within the reach of the most poorly paid. In September, 1889, the membership was 116; in the same month of the present year the list showed 260. Mr. Jenns would like to see a handsome building erected specially for them, because their influence is great. As the child is father to the man so are the young men to this province. What they are this country will be.

THE CHINESE MURDER.

One Chinaman Carves Another—Arrest of the Murderer—The Inquest, etc.

The particulars of the murder, reported in Saturday's TIMES, could not then be given, the crime having been committed at a late hour in the afternoon. The facts in brief are that a Chinaman named Ling, an employee of Mr. Milligan, residing on St. Lawrence street, chopped to death another Chinaman named Ah Tong. The latter had visited the former in the afternoon, and after a time Mrs. Milligan heard a row in the kitchen. She went to investigate and found the door locked. From the nature of the noise she concluded something serious was happening, and she telephoned for the police. Constable Walker responding promptly. As he entered the front gate Ling was met coming out, and was at once arrested.

On entering the kitchen it was found that the arrested man had just been cleaning up the floor, but blood stains on the floor leading to the Chinaman's room disclosed the fact that the body of the murdered man was secreted under the bed. The crime had been committed with a large and heavy cawer, the head of the victim being split open and the neck nearly severed.

The murderer, after having stowed away the body had evidently changed his clothes, for a lot of blood bespattered wearing apparel in a trunk of his, bore evidence of having recently been worn, although the clothes he had on at the time were neat and clean. The man Ling told the officers that the murdered man was a recent arrival from from China, and that a row had arose between them over an accusation of theft.

Drs. Milne and Morrison viewed the corpse, and the investigation disproved all idea of suicide, consequently the man Ling was taken to the cells and locked upon a charge of murder. The corpse of the murdered man was taken to Storey's undertaking rooms, and this afternoon an inquest was held. The arrested man has been carefully watched since being arrested, as Chinese criminals of his kind, have a common habit of suiciding.

An inquest was held this afternoon at the police court on the body of Fong Tong, by Dr. R. Morrison and a jury composed of Messrs. Thos. Houghton, foreman, G. L. Simpson, J. Barron, A Barnett, H. A. Potts and William Herbert. The Chinaman Ling was brought up, and the charge read over to him, it having been arranged that the prisoner be committed for trial by the coroner. After the jury had viewed the body, the investigation commenced, Officer Walker, the constable who arrested the prisoner, giving his evidence first. He stated that the prisoner had admitted having murdered the man Fong, but afterwards denied it. Mr. F. G. Walker appeared to watch the case on behalf of the prisoner, having been retained by prisoner's friends. At the time of going to press the case was in progress.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

BY ANNA KATHERINE GREEN.

CHAPTER XI.

AT THE HOTEL IN WASHINGTON.

There are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired; "yes or no?"

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties, he remarked, "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that he had a loving wife.

"Genevieve," he remarked, "you are coming out from under the shadow. You look almost brilliant to-day."

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content,

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigue of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting. But just as he was about to approach on tip-toe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning, saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

"Light, give me more light."

Astonished and yet more troubled, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clasped over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was as white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain, to produce such an effect as this. Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful unknown complaint."

"O, I have suffered," she cried, "suffered fearfully. I never thought to get through these last few hours alive, but—" Her hand pointed towards the New York paper which he held in his hand.

"The Herald!" she cried, let me see it, the notice of our marriage should be there." And with a laugh that was almost hysterical, she said: "Anything to forget that pain. Frivolity, if frivolity can do it."

More and more troubled, he watched her with darkness in his soul for a moment, and sank into a chair questioning within himself as to what was to be his fate. The sweetest of sounds aroused him. Genevieve was at his feet.

"Do I act wildly?" she murmured, her eyes gleaming with a natural light that yet looked very brilliant in contrast to the snowy locks which framed them on either side. "I think it is because my heart is so satisfied while my body is so racked with pain. But even this is better to-day; my head is all that troubles me now." And she cast her eyes down when she again became conscious of her white locks.

"Good God!" she murmured below her breath, "how shall I account for these."

Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need to account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and he led her before the mirror.

She almost started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvellous loveliness. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"Your own mother would not know you." At which simultaneous expression of the same idea he laughed and she colored.

"I am happy," she breathed. "I cannot tell her that my excuse for ageing thus suddenly is that my husband admires grey hairs."

"To her you can tell the truth. She must have known you were ill, though you kept it from your physician and lover."

"No one knew," she answered. "I bore it as I will bear it again if it comes."

"But it shall not come again. Your physician is now your husband, and you cannot deceive him."

"The pain is gone now, Walter." Thea with an arch smile all light, all joy, "Are you sure you like me better so? Will you not regret my brown locks after the first surprise is gone by?"

"Never," said he, and drawing her passionately to his breast, he whispered, "Admiration has grown into passion, Genevieve. I love you, not with calmness, propriety and discretion, but madly, as the first man loved the first woman before ever the serpent crept into paradise."

"And all because of my white hairs! I will be worthy of this crown," she exclaimed; and glided from him and disappeared in the little room beyond.

And Walter Cameron who had not wished to love more than was compatible with an undivided attention to his profession, found himself absolutely dazzled.

He was thinking of all this as I have said, and wondering over it while talking to her about her dress which on that day was especially picturesque and becoming. Nor did his thoughts stop at this point. He saw more plainly than he did the face before him, the looks of admiration which her appearance excited the first time he took her into a public assemblage. Then those pretty memories of her various freaks and fancies, which at times marred the effect of her presence, and other times heightened it—why should he recall them now when he had these deep inquiring eyes before him and these dimpling cheeks which were beginning to show such bloom and brightness! He felt annoyed at himself and yet his thoughts ran on. Why it was only yesterday she committed a breach of etiquette which argued a mind so far away from the scene in which they were taking a rather conspicuous part, that it needed all his love and indulgence to prevent him from betraying the shame which such culpable indifference to what was required of her as a guest aroused. And yet when recalled to her duty by a word, how graciously she had lent herself to the reparation of her fault. 'Twas a mysterious nature moved by mysterious moods, and yet with all this charm and gayety, all was not well with her. There was something hidden in his paradise which if once discerned he felt would banish sleep from his eyes. But he did not dare to question what it was, any more than he dared to question whether the illness of which she complained, had been the real secret of the extraordinary change which had taken place in her or not. But if this was so, he was but living over the experience of many a greater man before him, and her secret, if secret she had, was not a dishonoring one, or her eyes could never lift themselves to his with such purity of devotion as he now saw in them.

Arrived at this point in his meditations, he paused. He would drop the past from his thoughts and abandon himself solely to the present. Intent upon this resolve, he exclaimed suddenly:

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

"O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added "I hate New York! I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There I shall only have a part of you, here I have the whole."

He stooped over her and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure stepped forward, he beheld a face he knew, he paused and waited, while the other advancing; still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall-boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed towards Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve rose. A flush of indignation was on her brown and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellant, that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

It was not so with his companion. Either her beauty or the surprising change which had taken place in her appearance fascinated him. Yet he seemed to lose nothing of what was said.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

Dr. Cameron pushed forward a chair and invited his visitor to sit down.

"I shall be happy to hear," said he, while Genevieve withdrew into a window recess near by.

"I am Julius Molesworth. If you do not remember me as your former classmate and fellow-practitioner, you probably will as one of the leading witnesses in an inquest which has aroused considerable attention of late."

Dr. Cameron's countenance changed. For reasons that we know he had taken a great interest in this inquest, though he had said nothing about it to his wife.

"Pardon me," he replied, "I do recollect. I read of the death of your affianced wife with the utmost sympathy; for—"

His gaze wandered from the man before him to the person who had accompanied him into the room, and he grew strangely embarrassed. For in the large form of this man and the disguised but not wholly unfamiliar countenance, he thought he saw again that mysterious being under whose influence he had consented to act as a spy upon the privacy of Mildred Farley on that memorable evening of his marriage, and this being held up a warning finger and glanced with pointed consideration at his wife.

"For she died upon the same night that you were married," broke in Dr. Molesworth completing the other's sentence.

Dr. Cameron bowed. He knew now why the detective, if it were the detective, had stopped him. It would be anything but pleasant to Genevieve to hear of the extraordinary likeness between herself and this poor suicide; a likeness, moreover, which had evidently well nigh vanished in the change which had taken place in Mrs. Cameron, or Dr. Molesworth would have been struck by it, and he manifestly was not.

"It is of Miss Farley and her unaccountable death that I have first to speak," continued the intruder calmly. "You will be surprised to hear that for some reason unknown to me, the police authorities have seen fit to discredit the evidence given by me at that time, and that I stand before you now in the character of an accused man, with the prospect of arrest before me."

"I am sure—" Dr. Cameron stammered, glancing with some embarrassment at the tall and immovable figure of his wife.

"Do not think you must express surprise or sympathy," interpolated Dr. Molesworth coldly; "I am innocent. But," he continued with less dignity but more fervor, "that has nothing to do with the fact that my prospects are ruined by this suspicion and my career at an end. It is a great misfortune to me, I acknowledge, but you may make it a less serious one if you will."

"I?"

Why did Dr. Cameron look again at his wife? Why did the expression of Mr. Gryce, who was always looking at her, change and deepen indefinitely. She had not moved. Her two arms, stretched out and grasping the curtains on each side of her, had the firmness of steel, and in tre proud head held erect in the fixed attitude she was seemingly giving to the open world, no sign appeared of her having heard a word of what went on behind her in the room in which she stood. Yet her husband felt a strange chill as he noted her attitude, and thought of a cross outlined against a darkening sky. While Mr. Gryce, whose mind we have less skill in penetrating when he drops his eyebrows as now over his eyes, could have received anything but a cheerful impression from this figure of grace and beauty, or why the sudden rigidity in his own form, that but a moment before looked so comfortable and at ease. Mr. Molesworth alone remained unchanged.

"It is a conundrum which I have propounded to you," he observed, in calm allusion to what he had before said. "As you seem to possess no key to it—" He paused and one would have said he held his breath for a moment—"I shall have to produce my own. I—" he paused. "Did your wife speak?" he suddenly asked, rising with every appearance of respect.

"I think not," returned the other somewhat haughtily.

Dr. Molesworth bowed and again sat down. "Excuse me," he cried, and Dr. Cameron was sure he heard him sigh: "I would not wish to weary the lady." Then with recurrence to his business-like tones, "I asserted that you could help me. If a complicated and dangerous case were given you that demanded unusual measures, you would take them I am sure."

"I think so," returned the other, simply.

"Well, such a case I have," proceeded Dr. Molesworth, with steady impressiveness. "The patient is Bridget Halloran; you have doubtless heard of her and how she has been given up by Drs. S—— and B——. But I am certain that she can be cured. That this line of treatment—" He looked toward the detective, who thereupon handed him a slip of paper, "will prove startlingly efficacious and give to the man bold and determined enough to use it, an enviable notoriety."

"Let me see," exclaimed the other, his professional interest aroused in spite of himself.

The consultation which followed will not interest the reader. It was purely professional. Dr. Cameron's look of reserve and possible prejudice gave way to one of undisguised admiration, and he asked without any tone of envy in his voice:

"How did you come by this, Molesworth? It has the appearance of a positive discovery to me."

"I got it by hard thought," was the other's reply. "I get nothing by intuition as you do."

"So much the more credit to you;" observed Dr. Cameron; folding up the paper and putting it in his pocket.

"And you will take this case?"

"On the condition that if successful the entire credit shall be yours."

Julius Molesworth seemed as if he longed to hold out his hand but he did not do it, and a instant's silence fell upon the group.

"There seems to be no further reason for our remaining here," Dr. Molesworth at length observed. "I have finished my business, and," turning towards the detective, "am now at your service."

And yet he seemed in no hurry to go.

As for Mr. Gryce, he showed no signs of having heard the doctor. His glance had fallen upon a strip of passementerie on Mrs. Cameron's silken skirts. From his puckered brows it looked as though he were studying a problem.

"I hope you will be able to follow out your experiment yourself before many days," courteously remarked Dr. Cameron. "All will be cleared up before the grand jury, or I am very much mistaken in the man whose ideas I have just been forced to adopt."

"I never borrow any thing from hope," said he; and being risen to his feet by this time, he made a profound obeisance towards the immovable figure at the window, and turned to leave the room.

The detective tore his gaze from the strip of passementerie which had so engaged his attention and followed him. The stern and solemn picture which they both carried away with them was that of a woman's tall and rigid form stretched as it were on a cross against the sky, down which were slowly fluttering the first flakes of a coming snow storm.

THE LONG PENALTY.

She Was Fretful and Cross, and Her Life Is Weary Now.

Mothers who sometimes feel disposed to murmur at the restrictions involved in the care of little children may learn a lesson from this pathetic incident, narrated in the Home Magazine:

I was tired of washing dishes; I was tired of drudgery. I had always been so, and I was dissatisfied. I never sat down a moment to read that Jamie didn't want a cake, or a bit of paper to scribble on, or a bit of soap to make bubbles. "I'd rather be in prison," I said one day, "than have my life teased out so," as Jamie knocked my elbow when I was writing to a friend.

But a moment came when I had one plate less to wash, one chair less to set away by the wall in the dining-room; when Jamie's little crib was put away into the garret, and it has never come down since. I had been unusually fretful and discontented with him that damp May morning that he took the croup. Gloomy weather gave me the headache, and I had less patience then than at any other time. By and by he was singing in another room:

I want to be an angel, and presently rang out that metallic croup cough. I never hear that hymn since that it doesn't put me to the heart, for the croup cough rings out with it. He grew worse toward night, when my husband came home and went for a doctor. At first he seemed to help him, but it merged into inflammatory croup, and was soon over.

"I ought to have been called sooner," said the doctor.

I have a servant to wash dishes now, and when a visitor comes I can sit down and entertain her without having to work all the time. There is no little boy worrying me to open his jack-knife and there are no shavings on the floor. The magazines are not soiled with looking at the pictures, but stand prim and neat on the reading-table, just as I leave them.

"Your carpet never looks dirty," say weary, worn mothers to me.

But my life is as weary as theirs—weary with sitting in my parlor at twilight, weary with watching for the little arms that used to twine around my neck, for the curls that brushed against my cheek, for the young laugh that rang out with mine as we watched the hissing coal fire or made rabbits with the shadows on the wall, waiting merrily together for papa's coming home. I have the wealth and ease I once longed for, but at what price? And when I see other mothers with grown-up sons driving to town to church, and my hair silvered over with gray, I think what might have been had I murmured less at the providence of God.

THE CRY OF MILLIONS

OH, MY BACK!

STOP IT NOW,

SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.

I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have sought aid from different physicians without relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very violent attack that almost prostrated me in such a manner that I was bent over. When I sat down it was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to put on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Henley, with the DRAGON KIDNEY TEA, to my hotel, I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days, I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.

FOR ENGAGED GIRLS.

A Wise Woman Tells Them How to Treat Their Future Husbands.

You have a little band around the third finger of your left hand in which is set a turquoise, says the Ladies' Home Journal, and when it was put there you remembered that the Hindu said: "He who hath a turquoise hath a friend." Now, that's what you have in the man you love best, and whose wife you are going to become—a friend. He is your sweetheart, your lover, it is true, but because to you his heart seems best worth having, his love the richest gift you can possess, you will not vulgarize, as many girls do, the tie that binds. It is true you go with him alone to hear some wonderful music, or look at some fine pictures, but I hope it is not true that when you are at a party, or in your own home, you two pair off and make yourselves the objects for silly chatter and idiotic jesting.

He can love you with his whole heart, but he must not make you subject to ridicule. He can think you the most unselfish girl in the world, but he must not show his own selfishness by expecting you to devote your evenings exclusively to him, ignoring those who are at home. Let him come in and be one of them—there's a dear five minutes when he can speak to you, when he can kiss you on the lips that he knows are only the gates to sweet, pure speech, and when he can whisper the lovely nothings that mean so much to you both. Then, too, don't let him feel that he must give up all his friends for you; don't accept valuable presents from him, and don't assume an air of proprietorship with him. Tell him nothing about your family affairs, for the secrets of the household do not even belong to the man you are going to marry. Guard yourself in word and deed; hold his love in the best way possible; tie it firmly to you with the blue ribbon of hope, and never let it be eaten away by that little fox who destroys so many loving ties and who is called familiarity.

JEFFERSON ON HIMSELF.

The Curious Paper Discovered After the Famous Statesman's Death.

Jefferson was said to be quite averse to having his birthday celebrated during his lifetime, but he was not altogether undesirous of posthumous fame, but even in this he was modest, as the following curious paper found after his death will illustrate:

"Could the dead feel any interest in monuments or other remembrances of them the following words would be to me the most gratifying:

"On the grave a plain die or cube of three feet without any moldings, surmounted by an obelisk of six feet high, each of a single stone; on the face of the obelisk the following inscription and not a word more:

HERE WAS BURIED
THOMAS JEFFERSON,
AUTHOR OF THE DECLARATION OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE,
AUTHOR OF THE STATUTE OF VIRGINIA FOR RELIGIOUS FREEDOM,
AND
FATHER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF VIRGINIA

"Because of these, as testimonials that I have lived, I wish to be remembered. To be of coarse stone, of which my columns are made, that no one might be hereafter tempted to destroy it for the value of the materials. My bust by Caracchi, with the pedestal and truncated column on which it stands, might be given the university if they would place it in the dome of the rotunda.

"On the die of the obelisk might be engraved:

TORTURED FOR A DOLLAR.

A Cruel Practical Joke in the Land Where Mosquitoes Thrive.

A citizen of St. Louis was in Florida for his health. Not being strong he had a negro named Joe, who went around and assisted him when necessary. There are mosquitoes in Florida, and the St. Louisan was complaining one day about their number, says the St. Louis Republic.

"Dat ain't nothing, boss," said the negro servant Joe; "down in de swamp dey is terrible; dey is as big as gallinippers, and wo! don't dey bite."

On arriving there they were convinced. Mosquitoes half as big as sparrows swarmed about them in clouds.

"Joe," said the St. Louisan, a bright thought striking him, "how much would you take to lie down on the ground here, naked, for ten minutes, and let these gallinippers bite you?"

"Don't know, boss," said Joe with a shudder.

"Will you do it for one dollar?"

"Well, I'll try it, boss," returned the negro, and in a few minutes he was down on his stomach, as bereft of clothing as when he was born.

The sun was shining with terrible force, the thermometer being over a hundred in the shade! Joe had hardly settled himself when the mosquitoes swooped down on him with wild and bloodthirsty songs, and began a feast. Meanwhile one of the gentlemen was holding the watch.

The St. Louisan quickly drew a sunglass from his pocket, and getting a focus, proceeded to blister Joe's back in fine style. In a few moments it was sizzing, and the cruel tormentor asked Joe how he felt.

"Well, boss," said Joe, gasping. "I don't mind the gallinippers, but, boss, please kill that wasp what is sticking his stinger in my back."

Joe got his dollar.

ORIGIN OF BEN HUR.

How General Wallace Came to Write His Now Famous Novel.

Talking with an intimate friend of General Lew Wallace the other day, says a writer in the New York Star, I learned the true inspiration of his famous novel, "Ben Hur." "Wallace was on an Eastern-bound train," said my informant, "and while going through the drawing-room car he passed the open door of a compartment in which sat Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. 'Come in,' said the latter. 'I'm lonely in here, and want some one to chat with.' Wallace entered, and seated himself. 'All right, Colonel,' he said, 'what shall we chat about?' 'Lots of things,' replied Ingersoll. 'Is there a future life?' Looking out of the window dreamingly, as the express sped on, he answered his own query. 'I don't know—do you? Is there a God? I don't know—do you? Was Christ the son of God? I don't know—do you?' He paused and looked keenly at Wallace. The General was a little embarrassed by the abruptness of the great infidel's interrogatories. He replied: 'Really, Ingersoll, I have never given much thought or study to the questions you propound. I had a Christian training, and I have always tacitly accepted them.' 'Indeed?' said Colonel Ingersoll. 'Why, man, you surprise me! They are vital issues. I have studied the subject thoroughly. Every man ought to. Now, take my advice and look into the matter. You'll find you'll agree with me.' 'I went away from this interview both embarrassed and mortified,' said the General, 'that I did not feel competent to discuss so important a matter with so learned a thinker. I made up my mind that I would never place myself again in so embarrassing a situation. I took down my books, and read every authority I could lay my hands on. After a year's study, so far from agreeing with the great agnostic in his expressed opinions, I wrote 'Ben Hur.' That is my reply to him!'"

BIG ELEPHANT YARN.

A Tug-of-War Extraordinary as Told By a Disciple of Munchausen.

The London Graphic prints some elephant and crocodile pictures obtained from a certain Major-General Robley, who bases them on an "elephant yarn," as he styles it, told him by one Barcus, who was probably related to a celebrated German Baron named Munchausen. Barcus thus told his tale, and it will be seen that there is a good deal of tail to it:

"Two years ago I was on a shooting expedition up the Ganges, and on the lookout for big game of any kind. One day I came across the 'spoor' of a very big rogue elephant. As it was getting dark, I determined to follw up the 'spoor' next day. Accordingly daybreak saw me on the track, and soon I came to a large tank, and there I saw my friend having a farewell drink, and splashing in the water like an animated haystack. He was far beyond range, and as there was little or no cover near, I could only watch and wait. Presently he moved off, and, the wind being favorable, I followed closely.

"And now comes the strange part of my story. We arrived at a smaller tank, which I saw at a glance was full of crocodiles. In floundered the elephant and down went his trunk for a drink. Suddenly he started and began to struggle like mad. I rushed close up and found he had been seized by a large crocodile. A brief struggle and the elephant began to 'walk away.' But soon there was a check, and then, to my astonishment, I saw another 'croc' had got No. 1 by the tail. But still the elephant had the pull, when a second and then a third 'croc' fell in, each holding on to the other's tail.

"It was a grand sight, and I became quite excited. I offered my tracker 'evens' on the elephant, which he took. Suddenly another 'croc' fell in, and the elephant began to give. I thought it was all up with him, but he just twisted his tail around a tree, and there he was as firm as a rock. The tracker claimed a foul pull, but I overruled his objection."

"But how did it end?" asked I, yawning for it was getting late.

"I will tell you," said Barcus. "The elephant brought his native cunning to bear where force failed. He took a deep breath and blew with all his force down the first 'croc's' throat, nearly choking him. 'Croc' opened his mouth to breathe, and the elephant walked away. And thus ends my yarn."

Value of a Passenger Train.

But few persons who view a passenger train as it goes thundering past have an idea that it represents a cash value of from $75,000 to $120,000, but such is the case. The ordinary express train represents from $83,000 to $90,000. The engine and tender are valued at $10,500; the baggage car, $1,000; the postal car, $2,000; the smoking car, $5,000; two ordinary passenger cars, $10,000 each; three palace cars, $15,000 each—total, $83,000. Many trains are worth $150,000.

A Warning.

MR. EDITOR,—It is a well-known fact that the majority of people are inclined to look upon a cold in the head as a matter of little importance—involving at the most only a temporary inconvenience. No more disastrous mistake was ever made. The neglected cold in the head is the source of the catarrhal affections with which about seven tenths of the people of this country are afflicted, and catarrh itself is too often the preliminary stages to consumption and death. The symptoms of catarrh are manifold, but among them may be mentioned, offensive breath; dull, oppressive headache; offensive droppings from the nostrils into the throat and bronchial tubes; deafness or partial deafness; constant hawking and spitting; weak and watery eyes; a hacking cough and feeling of general debility; ringing in the ears and frequent dizziness. These are but a few of the more general symptoms, and those who experience them should lose no time in applying a remedy. Delays are proverbially dangerous, and in the case of this too prevalent disease may lead to death. We offer Nasal Balm to the public as a positive cure for cold in the head and for catarrh in all its forms and stages. Nasal Balm has been tested in thousands of cases, and the testimonials in our possession prove that it is all we claim for it. It has cured other sufferers; it will cure you. It is easy to use, pleasant and agreeable and does not require a douche, or any torturing instrument to apply it. Give it a trial and be convinced of its great efficacy. Sold by all dealers or sent post free on receipt of price 50c. for small or $1 for large size bottles by addressing Fulford & Co., Brockville, Ont. d&w

THE INDEPENDENTS.

The result of the election on the Lower Fraser confirms us in the attitude we have taken for the last year, namely, that the present Government is out of touch with the great mass of the electors of this province. We all remember the overwhelming defeat of the Government on the Island last June, together with the decisive victory of the Independents of Vancouver, and now we have had a second expression of opinion in which the Independents carried the day, all of which aggregate results accentuate disapproval of the policy and the methods of the Government. Nevertheless, we must concede that the prospects of the Government are not so desperate. The situation is complicated. The Opposition and the Independents are not, strictly speaking, en rapport. Identical, almost, as is the policy of the respective parties there seems to be a lack of cordial appreciation of each other, mutual distrust; no disposition, apparently, particularly on the part of the Independents, to merge their issues with the element from which they borrowed their doctrines. Indeed, assuming the News to be the exponent of the political philosophy of the Independents, we should suppose that it anticipates a coalescence with the Government, or perhaps it would be more correct to say anticipates for the Government their coalescence with the Independents. The News distinctly informs the Government that, "If the Government desires their support it will mould its measures to conform to the policy with which the Independents went before the people." What does this mean? It means, if it means anything, that the Government must turn their coats. It means the complete and utter ascendancy of the Independents. Will the Government submit to this arbitrary proposition, which means, not merely a change in the personnel in the departments of the executive, but a reversal of their policy amounting in effect to actual stultification. The attitude of the News is inexplicable. We fail to understand why a coalition with the Government is preferably and more likely to conserve public interests than the formation of a party by fusion with the Opposition. The News should know that the Government will scarcely submit to its dictation, except to avert the calamity of an overthrow. It should know that it cannot acquire the Government on the terms it proposes and rest assured of an acquisition which will not create discord. The acquisition of the Government under such circumstances would have the effect of a spoonful of hot tea on a lump of sugar; the Independents would dissolve. In matters of foreign policy in which quick action is necessary to preserve national integrity, political parties may and do bury the hatchet. With reference to matters of domestic policy, however, fusions, and especially one sided ones, are but measures to gain time. Politicians can no more change their spots than can leopards and, in consenting to identify themselves with the party from whom they have radically differed, that party is the recipient of a questionable not to say dangerous addition. In view of the fact that the stuff the government is made of is not of the kind that will mix with the material of which the Independent are said to be composed, we fail to see the object of the News in presenting the government with an ultimatum. The more wiser course, it seems to us, would be an effort to fuse elements so closely allied that they are practically chips off the same block. The News persisting in this course will save the concern which it professes to detest, and reaps no more than temporary advantage for its party. Politics consists in compromises, but compromises which involves the fusion of discordant elements will benefit nobody save perhaps some half a dozen principals. Has the News a lingering love for the Premier that it hates to break the idol or does it use words to conceal its real intentions.

DUELLING.

We do not approve of duelling for two reasons. First, it is immoral, and second, it is illogical. The man who regards himself as having been injured to the extent that only blood will atone, having at the same time no moral compunctions in the matter, is simply a fool to take the even chances of a duel, when though he kill his man he is guilty of murder. There is no essential moral difference between killing a man according to the code and killing at sight, whether your adversary be armed or not, and furthermore there is no good law, moral or social, which requires a man to risk his life to maintain his honor. If private vengeance can be tolerated at all, it should be with the distinct understanding that the man who goes another an injury must take the chances of being shot down without an opportunity to defend himself. But the point we are driving at is this: It is only on the North American continent nowadays that the duel is really a dangerous affair. In Germany duellists pad themselves as does a baseball catcher, and prod each other about the face and arms. The quality of nerve required to avenge wounded honor in affairs of this sort is much of the kind the Sioux Indian exemplifies in going through the "sun dance." The chance of fatal injury, is perhaps, one in a thousand. In France duelling is even less dangerous than in Germany, and in fact, is defended only on the ground that it is cheaper than litigation. The most recent French duel was between a son of SARA BERNHARDT and a dramatic critic. The former challenged the latter on account of a disparaging criticism of his mother's impersonation of Cleopatra. Neither of the principals were seriously hurt. In contradistinction to the French method of avenging affronts, we have a shooting affair in Kentucky over the matter of a negro's right to vote, in which three men were killed. This sanguinary affair is described as "a duel of demons." We concur with the alliterative "head" writer that the affair has its demoniac aspects, but as illustrative of the chivalric instinct, it transcends anything that has happened in Europe in recent years, and should cause the padded duelists of the German universities to hide their heads. If we are to have duelling let us have it of the kind that tries men's souls. Society should declare that men who insist in taking the law into their own hands must assume some risk. Carpet knight duelling is more contemptible than prize fighting.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hon. Mr. MARCHAND has been elected speaker of the Quebec legislative assembly, and Hon. Mr. BLANCHET, leader of the Opposition.

It is said that if Hon. Mr. FOSTER is successful in making arrangements for reciprocal trade between Canada and the West Indies during his visit there, the session of Parliament will not meet till the end of February or 1st of March.

The citizens of Toronto were told that the street railway did not pay. Proceedings are in progress for the acquisition of the railway by the city, and during the hearing of evidence it has been shown that while only $7,200 was originally put into the concern, the owners had during the past eleven years drawn out over one million and a quarter dollars, inclusive of profits.

The Quebec legislature was opened on the 5th instant. The Government will ask the House to meet the additional expenses caused by the payment of interest on the proposed loan by raising the price of license for the sale of intoxicating liquors, by levying a special duty on the working of mines, etc. Referring to the acceptance by the Protestant committee of the council of public instruction of the sum voted by the Legislature, as compensation in connection with the settlement of the Jesuits estate' question, the Lieut.-Governor said he had reason to believe it would have the effect of putting an end to all agitation.

A prominent business man of New York city submits the following table of prices on familiar commodities arranged so as to be readily understood by those who are not acquainted with technical terms:

Article	Old rate per cent.	New rate per cent.
Cotton corduroy	35	75
Fine cassimere	48	60
Sealskin sacques	20	20
Silk plush to imitate seal sacques	50	110
Woollen used by the workingman	30	110
Fine broadcloth used by the rich man	50	60
Cotton velvet	40	60
Silk velvet	50	50
Cotton laces and handkerchiefs	40	60
Silk laces and handkerchiefs	50	60
Silk striped cotton sleeve linings	35	100
Silk sleeve linings	50	50
Cheap black Alpaca	60	100
Black silk	50	50

The above table tells an eloquent story of injustice and oppression, and it tells why the Protectionists were beaten at the late elections.

From the Seattle Journal we learn that Judge BEACH of Toledo, Ohio, has decided that the granting of a bonus by a town toward the establishment of a manufacturing enterprise within its limits, and the unconditional acceptance of such bonus confers upon the town a perpetual interest in the bonused establishment. The facts are as follows: The town of Port Austin bonused a grist mill; the owners of which subsequently undertook to remove the establishment to some other locality. The people objected, and the case was taken into the courts, the judge deciding that the town had a "perpetual interest" in the concern and therefore granting a "perpetual injunction" to prevent it removal. The Journal is of the opinion that the judge is a "worthy jurist," a believer in the "everlasting right of people who confer substantial favors on infant industries to retain some sort of interest in the child." Whether Judge BEACH's decision is good law or not is a question, but we fully concur with the Journal that "the average industry in search of a bonus is an insatiate cormorant, taking all in sight as only a common right, no matter how rich the beneficial franchise granted, and refusing stubbornly to pay one cent of dividend on the gratitude account. Less extravagant sentiment, and more cold-hearted business in these matters, would prove a safe rule for infant commonwealths to follow.

AN OPEN LETTER.

"If one man can command the land upon which others must labor, he can appropriate the produce of their labor as the price of his permission to labor. The fundamental law of nature, that her enjoyment by man shall be consequent upon his exertion, is thus violated. The one receives without producing, the others produce without receiving. The one is unjustly enriched; the others are robbed." Progress and Poverty. Bk. 7, chap. 1.

To the Officers and Members of the Trades Assembly, Victoria, B.C.

GENTLEMEN: Recognizing the fact that the organizations which your body represents have for their principal object the improvement of the condition of the industrial class, and declaring ourselves engaged in the same laudable effort, we take the liberty of introducing to your notice a petition to the city council, asking that "improvements" shall be assessed for taxation at one half their value, provision for such action having been secured at the last session of our Provincial Parliament. In support of the petition we beg to offer the following arguments:

By "decreasing" the tax on improvements, we claim that it will stimulate this form of industry, and thus give employment to labor, skilled and unskilled. It is generally conceded that when labor is fully employed all kinds of business are prosperous.

Next, we contend that by "increasing" the tax on land it will render the holding of land idle less profitable, and to that extent will discourage speculation in land. Such speculation we hold is opposed to the interest of workingmen, as it naturally and invariably increases rents, and thus adds to the cost of living, while we believe we are safe in saying it was never known to increase wages, but rather the reverse.

Speculation in land does not give employment to labor, yet it compels men to pay two prices for a lot to build a house on.

Our theory is that the very first condition that has to be complied with, before labor can be profitably and legitimately employed, is "the consent of the owner of the land where the work is to be carried on."

It makes no difference whether the land is owned by the government, by the city, by a syndicate, or by a private individual, the conditions are the same: the "owner is lord of the land," and if all the capital controlled by Jay Gould and the Vanderbilts was held ready for the purpose, on the one hand, and every working man in British Columbia was depending on this particular job for his living on the other hand, yet, gentlemen, not one dollar of this vast capital could be invested, nor could one dollar be earned by this army of labor until the owner of the land gives the word. Who is boss of the situation? It needs no answer, gentlemen, we can all see the point.

Our fight is with the landlord, not with the capitalist. If we chop down the tree in which capital is hiding, we shall certainly bring capital to the ground, and then, what? Why the landlord grabs him, and labor is as far from the attainment of its aims as ever.

No, gentlemen, when labor fights capital it fights its friend and naturally; while the smiling landlord, the common enemy of both, stands complacently by, enjoying the spectacle of the battle, and shrewdly collecting his rent for the use of the battle-field."

Gentlemen, we ask you respectfully to sign this petition and to use your influence in getting others to do the same, in order that improvements "which are the fruits of labor" may bear a lighter proportion, while land which is held merely for speculation shall bear a heavier proportion of the burdens of municipal taxation.

Asking your earnest consideration of this question we remain gentlemen, in the cause of labor reform, very respectfully yours,

THE VICTORIA SINGLE TAX CLUB.

Note—The above letter was intended to accompany copies of the petition alluded to, but owing to a misconception as to date of meeting was too late, hence its appearance in this form.

BRITISH COLUMBIA MEDICAL COUNCIL.

TO THE EDITOR:—Kindly give space to the following article, not so much on account of the persons who have been before the board for license this month, but rather for the information of the public and general practitioners, who may wish to redress the existing evils by legislative steps when parliament meets in January. It is well known that a long article was inserted in the World of Oct. 2nd, complaining of the unjust actions of the president and secretary of the council towards a sick medical man sent to British Columbia on account of his health.

The published article, as well as other matters known to medical men of Victoria, aroused the council's ire and brought results which appear most unjust and dishonorable. Even those applicants who were successful were grieved at what they considered the unjust treatment measured out to one or two. Considerable disturbance occurred at the council between the president, secretary and one or two of the applicants, and a certain obscure member of the council, whose election was simply gained by the carelessness of several medicals of this city in not opposing him, inasmuch as they disliked to associate themselves with the president and secretary of the soi disant council, not one of which holds a degree or qualification of Great Britain and Ireland, France or Germany, and who never passed an examination to be put on the register, nor yet can they produce, but rather the reverse, any special test or skill to examine applicants for the license, which license costs $100 as a preliminary ballot fee before applicants are allowed to be examined, and in case of skill on the examiners part is refused and $50 of the modest sum demanded is retained. Several doctors, and amongst them the successful candidates, appeared at the government office and supported the complaint of one or two medicals, whom they considered had been unjustly dealt with. The government, after documents, evidences, etc., had been gone into, promised to legislate next year and redress the grievances complained of. A Medical Board was asked for of the government to examine unsuccessful candidates. Seven or eight medical gentlemen of Victoria have already agreed to become examiners and give the government the result of the examination. An application was made to the admiral of the fleet for the surgeon's co-operation. The admiral, however having to leave, prevented the application being successful. An application has been made to the president of the State Medical Board at Seattle to be present. Six or eight of the examiners will be English, who hold the highest degrees, residing in Seattle and British Columbia. After said examination the result will be submitted to the Government, together with a petition from all classes, asking the legislation to interfere and prevent further abuse by medical club, which demands $100 as preliminary to the examination and ballot, and only $50 to be returned if refused.

In a few days a petition will be left at the various publishing offices, and in other parts of the city, for signatures to a bill to be proposed to the House on its meeting. Several practitioners and members of Parliament and of the Cabinet have promised to push the matter when brought forward.

Kindly pardon me for my extended communication, of which I feel sure the public will appreciate. Clubs, societies and other bodies are courteously asked to co-operate. Yours,

JUSTICE AND COMMON SENSE.

PRINCIPAL ONES REMANDED

Minor Cases Disposed of in the City Police Court.

A look of disgust overspread the faces of almost every one of the large number of spectators present at the city police court this morning when the Chinese murderer did not appear in the dock with the other prisoners. They had gone there in the hope of learning every detail for themselves, but were doomed to disappointment, and had to be satisfied with the information gleaned about a few minor cases, the first which consisted of a charge of drunkenness preferred against one Michael Kelly. He pleaded guilty to the charge and asked for four days grace to pay his fine, but his honor dissented and said that all must be treated alike, one month at hard labor was recorded against Mr. Kelly.

Wm. Sullivan was charged with having imbibed too much. In answer to the question of the clerk as to whether he was guilty or not, Sullivan answered, "I was only half drunk, your honor."

Clerk—He was only half drunk, your honor.

His honor—Only half drunk!

Officer Irvine, however, proved that he was whole drunk, and so the regular $5 was imposed.

Charlie, an Indian, as is the general rule with his race, smiled blandly while the charge of drunkenness was read against him, and answered "Nowitka," which entitled him to pay a fine of $1 and $1 costs, but as that sum was not forthcoming he was given one month in the common gaol.

Chas. Cullin was charged by Sergt. Walker with obstructing the sidewalk. The prosecutor deposed that he and Officer Redgrave were engaged with stopping a fight on Douglas street several nights ago, when the defendant had tempted to interfere and told the officers to leave the men alone. This course they refused to do, and Cullin taking advantage of the crowd walked away. At this point of the proceedings the defendant asked for a remand until Wednesday which was granted.

The next case on the list was a little more interesting than the others, the principals, Thos. McDonald and John Carl, being charged by one John Smith with highway robbery. Mr. Wootton appeared for the defence and asked for a remand until Thursday which was granted.

Sergt. Walker was walking along the western side of Government street with Johnson, on Saturday night when they saw a man come out of the German saloon, closely followed by two other men. They had only taken a few steps when the man who came out first was knocked down by the two others, and according to the victim's story relished at at. Sergt. Walker came up immediately and got there just as Smith was getting up. He ran when he saw the officer, and yelled out "those men robbed me." The two were then taken to the cells, protesting their innocence. The bartender of the Germania saloon, Smith with three dollars when he left the saloon, and he only had 10 cents when searched.

The president's report congratulated the society on the success achieved at the last exhibition. The displays had all been good, and fully up to former years. Mr. Dalby mentioned that seventeen years ago he had the honor of being president, and in that year only about 300 exhibits were shown. The great increase since showed how well the country had advanced. One thing was evident, and that was that more space had to be provided for future exhibitions, and he trusted that the new board would at once get to work in the matter.

After the adoption of the president's report, votes of thanks were tendered to the retiring officers for their efficient services, to Mr. R. B. McMicking for his assistance in lighting the grounds, to Messrs. Dalby, Ballentyne & Claxton for the use of their offices, to Mr. M. Miller for printed matter, to the corporation of Victoria for lighting apparatus and donations, to those who contributed special prizes, to the press, and to all the citizens who had done so much to make the exhibition a complete success. The meeting than adjourned.

Provincial Police.

Provincial Officer McNeil returned from Metchosin last evening with Dorcey, the colored man, who is wanted for assault. Dorcey had bragged that no six men could take him but Officer McNeil found it an easy matter although his man had a shotgun, rifle and revolver in his house. He was handed over to the city authorities this afternoon.

James Bridges will appear in the provincial court to-morrow to answer to the charge of having hen pheasants in his possession.

THE U. S. ELECTIONS.

The McKinley Bill Believed to Have Been Disastrous to the Republican Party.

The fact of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and other New England States going Democratic this year is certainly a Waterloo for the Republican party. A defeat such as this in the stronghold of protection will no doubt have a depressing effect upon the Republican party in the doubtful states. The question is, who is responsible for this decided turn of affairs? Was it McKinley or Blaine? Have we not here another Roscoe Conklin affair? Had Mr. Conklin supported Blaine it is now conceded Mr. Blaine would have been elected by a large majority. Had Blaine supported the McKinley Bill the Republican party would have carried everything before them. Nevertheless we are not in favor of the McKinley Bill. Had Bill McKinley been able to see the effect of his McKinley Bill in the same light that we of Victoria view it, or had he come to Victoria, and had a pair of Mr. Seward's celebrated spectacles adjusted to his short sighted eyes, he would have been able to see clear through the election. He would have found Mr. Seward's office at the corner of Yates and Douglas streets, and although he may be Bill McKinley, of McKinley Bill fame, he would be obliged to await his turn at Mr. Seward's busy office. Mr. Seward is going east in a few weeks, and will probably call on Bill McKinley to suggest as a substitute for the McKinley Bill a bill of reciprocity.

"A Very Gentle Reminder."

For the building fund of the new cathedral our social amateurs will give a thoroughly entertaining performance on Wednesday evening next at the Victoria theatre. Rehearsals have been very frequent, to endeavor to present a complete representation of "Meg's Diversion." and "Ruth's Romance." The box plan was opened to-day and a very busy day it has proved; verifying the fact that Victoria always supports local talent. Mr. Adderly is again working very hard to ensure another success.

DEDICATORY SERMON

ON THE RE-OPENING OF FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Rev. Dr. Cochrane Ably Expounds the Twenty-Fourth Psalm to a Big Congregation—The Pioneer Presbyterian Edifice in Victoria Open Once Again.

Once more the pioneer church of Presbyterianism in Victoria is open to its congregation for Divine worship; but the edifice bears marks of progress and enlargement to meet the necessities of its growth. It looked very nice and comfortable the other day when almost ready to be occupied, but it looked doubly so yesterday filled with a large and intelligent congregation. After all, the only way to see a church to the best advantage is to fill it with worshippers. The service yesterday was rendered bright and attractive by the efforts of the choir, but of course the principal point was the dedication sermon by Rev. Dr. Cochrane, of Brantford.

After reading and remarking on several appropriate passages of scripture, Dr. Cochrane chose as his text Psam 24, 7-10, his theme being the King entering within the gates. He said: In bygone years, when England's kings and queens entered the city of London through Temple Bar, the gate being for the time closed against them, the herald demanded entrance, saying

OPEN THE GATE.

Then a voice from within was heard saying, "who is this?" The herald responded, "the king or queen of England," as the case might be. Then the gate was opened, and royalty entered in amid the ringing cheers of a loyal people.

Something of the same gladness is exhibited when a victorious commander returns to his native city, or the seat of empire, having imperilled his life in defence of its rights and liberties, and won the battle. On such occasions it was by no means uncommon to take the gates from their hinges, to indicate the joyous welcome that awaited the hero: while in eastern walled cities, the gates were literally lifted up, as the returning chief passed on to the citadel to receive the honors of his sovereign. Such were the circumstances in which King Saul, and David, the stripling shepherd boy, returned from the conquest of Goliath and the Philistines. The women came out of all the cities of Israel, singing and dancing to meet King Saul with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music, and the women answered one another as they played, and said, "Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands."

We know nothing of the primary occasion when this 24th Psalm was composed, or when it was first sung. It is an advent Psalm in the fullest sense of the word. The language is equally adapted to the tabernacle to the temple not yet erected: to the ascension of Christ after his resurrection: to coming events in gospel history: to his reception into our hearts, and his final occupation of the celestial sanctuary, with all his redeemed and glorified ones.

Probably it was intended to commemorate the bringing up of the ark of the covenant from the house of Abededom, to remain within curtains upon the hill of Zion, until such time as the temple was completed. On that occasion, we are told King David led the way, in a sacred dance of joy; while all the house of on all manner of instruments made of fir wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals. "Thus all Israel brought up the ark of the covenant of the Lord, with shouting and sound of cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps. And David danced before the Lord with all his might."

But the Psalm was doubtless used long after the death of King David, when Solomon's temple had been finished and dedicated, and the people gathered from the different tribes and localities in Palestine, to celebrate the annual feasts. Jerusalem was and this psalm could be most appropriately sung as the pilgrims were on the way to Zion. When the Holy Mount was reached, the King or High Priest steps forth and asks the crowd of intending worshippers "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place? To which the first chorus respond "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart: who hath not lifted up his soul into vanity, nor sworn deceitfully," and the second chorus add, "He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation." As the procession comes near the gate of the city, the King cries out "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up ye everlasting doors; and the King of Glory shall come in:" while those in charge of the gates inquire, "Who is the King of Glory?" and the first chorus answer, "The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle." The King or High Priest again exclaims, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of Glory shall come in," while the same question is asked as before, and finally, the whole congregation, and chorus unite in a grand final outburst of praise, "The Lord of Hosts, he is the King of Glory."

That the psalm has reference to the sanctuary in some form, is evident from the question put in the 3rd verse, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in His holy place?" Those who are meet to enter the King's presence are the purified ones. The very thought of the sinful being, admitted to the holy place, seems to overwhelm the mind of the writer. Who shall enter? Can any one enter? Who are those that are favored with a glimpse of the glorious one, that inhabits eternity and the praises thereof? Amazing thought—wondrous condescension—what guilty man should gaze upon and hold fellowship with the eternal? Passing on from the Old Testament dispensation to the new, we can imagine just such a scene, when after having finished his atoning work and triumphing over death and hell and dragging at his chariot wheels his enemies, the Saviour was taken up from Olivet, to sit on his father's right hand, and take possession of his mediatorial throne. "God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet. Sing praises to God, sing praises; sing praises unto our King, sing praises." "Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive." The angelic watchers looking over the battlements of heaven, cry out: "Who is this King of Glory?" and then join in the glad psalm of praise, as the doors open wide to receive the victor.

"So his triumphal chariot walls
And angels chant the solemn lay,
Lift up your heads ye heavenly gates,
Ye everlasting doors give way."

As the poet says:—

"In this great ascent, we see the proof supreme
Of immortality, and did he rise?
Hear O ye nations! Hear it, O ye dead,
He rose! He rose! He burst the gates of death.

"Lift up your heads, ye heavenly gates,
And give the King of Glory to come in,
Who is this King of Glory? He who left
His throne of glory for the pangs of death,
He who slew
The ravenous foe that gorged all human race,
He whose puissant might
Subdued Abaddon, and the infernal powers
Of darkness, bound in adamantine chains;
Who wrapped in glory with the Father reigns,
Omnipotent, immortal, infinite!

And need I say, that most appropriate of all will be the language of the psalm, when the Lord, streng and mighty—the warrior King—enters within the everlasting doors with all his blood-washed saints. His former entrance to Jerusalem, on the eve of crucifixion, and before his descent into the deep shades of humiliation and death was befitting the Royal Son of David, The whole city was moved. The long pent-up enthusiasm of the common people burst forth in spontaneous homage to him, who by wondrous works and deeds of mercy had proved his right to the highest honors. Hosannas rent the air—multitudes poured down the Mount of Olives, while, "riding on an ass came one of noble aspect, like a king. The people spread their garments in the way, and scattered branches of palm trees"—But far grander shall be His triumphal entry into heaven, when the last of His chosen ones has been saved, and the end of His redemptive work achieved. Never has such a scene been witnessed as shall then attract the gaze of men and angels. An immense host, more numerous perhaps than was ever collected for such a purpose, accompanied Xerxes in his attempted conquest of Greece—a multitude gathered from the Indies to the Sybian desert—a very sea of nations, rolling on in serried waves, with turbans and helmets of brass and steel and silver and gold. Seven days and seven nights without intermission were they in crossing the Hellespont, and as these thronged ranks moved on with exultation, they strewed branches in the pathway of their king. But grander far shall be the pageant that awaits the Savior as he enters within the everlasting doors, followed by a numerous train of angelic and adoring spirits! Patriarchs, priests and prophets, apostles, martyrs and confessors, of every nation, and people, and tongue. It is not an army held in subjection by force, as in the case of the Grecian warrior, crowding round the chariot wheels of an ambitious despot, but a rejoicing, grateful people, who celebrate a world-wide victory, and offer spontaneous homage to Him, who has bought them by His precious blood. No need, then, to ask who is the King of Glory? We know Him by His scars and wounds, by his many crowns, by His resurrection glory. His head and his hairs are white, like wool—as white as snow; His eyes are as a flame of fire; His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; his voice as the sound of many waters; in His right hand are seven stars; from his mouth proceeds a two-edged sword; and His countenance is as the sun shining in his strength. He is clothed in a vesture dipped in blood, on His vesture and thigh are written:

"KING OF KINGS AND LORD OF LORDS."

As He thus enters the kingdom, with ten thousand times ten thousand of His holy ones, the empyreal heaven shall resound with joy, and the gates and everlasting doors be flung wide open, to receive the glorious and mighty one, who has obtained salvation for His saints, and triumphed over all His foes.

Such a prospect, is transporting. It is more than pleasing to think of such a consummation of our fondest hopes, when Christ and the members of His church shall enter paradise regained. But before we can enter within the temple above, He must reign within the temple of the soul. The heart must be opened wide in faith and love, even as the triumphal arches gave welcome to the conqueror. Are all in this church prepared to follow him within the gates? Are we of the number who shall see the King in his beauty and commune with him throughout eternity? He now stands knocking for admission. Are we ready to say in the language of Laban to Elizer, the servant of Abraham, "Come in thou blessed of the Lord, wherefore standest thou without?" Dr. Raleigh, of London, who was recently called away to his rest, remarked when near his end, "My peoples' prayers make me sometimes think, I have a little more work to do; but if not, I shall calmly march up to the gates!" What a happy frame of mind, when the gloom of death begins to shroud the vision? Are we thus assured, that when the warfare is done and the victory is won, we shall like him, with banner unfurled, calmly and joyfully march up to the gates!

The language of the text is also appropriate when we build or enlarge and dedicate temples for the worship of God. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in." When giving instructions to Moses for the building of the tabernacle, God used these words: "Let them make me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them." At the giving of the law at Mount Sinai he said. "In all places where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee." Nor can any one read the account of the dedication of Solomon's temple, without remarking the intense earnestness of the king, that the Lord would come in and take possession of the building set apart for his worship. The long expected day had come. The work was completed on a scale of magnificence and splendor, never before nor since equalled, far less surpassed. The king comes from his palace to take part in the dedication ceremonies, preceded by his five hundred guards, bearing aloft their golden targets. And now a crash of music from harp, and timbrel and trumpet and human voice arose, all united in praising and thanking the Lord for his marvellous goodness and condescension. And then the answering God appears in cloud and his glory fills the house, while Solomon stands before the altar in the presence of the congregation and spreads forth his hands saying: "Will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? Behold heaven, and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house which I have built. Now, therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting place, thou, and the ark of thy strength. Let thy priest, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in thy goodness." Nor did he cry in vain. The Lord said unto him, I have hallowed this house which thou has built, to put my name there for ever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually."

DEDICATORY SERMON.

You say, God is everywhere—I know Space is His temple. Search creation in its most excluded spots and you find him. Take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost bounds of immensity, and there you discover the footprints of

HIS MAJESTY AND OMNIPOTENCE.

But the house erected for his worship, where prayer is went to be made, and the sacrifice of loving hearts offered is specially his delight. "The Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him. The palace is not for man but for God." The church is His loved abode. He loves the gates of Zion, more than all the dwellings of Jacob. He hath chosen Zion, and desired it for His habitation—this is His rest. Here He dwells, for He has desired it. Why do we build or enlarge and beautify sanctuaries, and exhaust the contributions of taste and genius in their embellishment? Not surely for our own convenience and comfort merely, and to gratify a taste for the beautiful; not surely for the mere exchange of Christian civilities on the Sabbath day, when in obedience to the dictates of custom, we forego our worldly engagements and rest from physical and mental toil. But that we may see the King and enter His secret pavilion, where He gives audience to His waiting saints. We want a refuge from the discordant noises of the week, from the contentions and tumultuous passions of restless humanity. We want to commence at the world's great altar of sacrifice, with that glorious one, who has sprinkled with His blood the mercy seat, and made it accessible to guilty man. No matter how comely the edifice, and how chaste the internal adornments, unless the King enter within the gates, congregations assemble in vain, praise is a formal act, preaching an empty sound, and the house built for God a magnificent mockery. These material walls are nothing but an enclosure for the nobler spiritual building. The Holy Ghost dwells in hearts rather than in gorgeous cathedrals. If He fills the latter with His presence, it is because around the altar there are souls who worship Him in spirit and in truth. When, therefore, we enter and admire magnificent temples, our thoughts should not be concentrated upon the beauty and grandeur of the external surroundings so much as upon the results intended. Our language should not be "See what manner of stones are here, but see what manner of men!" Every edifice erected for devotional purposes should be a spot, where angels ascend and descend from the court of heaven carrying with them messages of peace and good will to men; where the silent nurture of souls goes on without interruption, where the weary and heavy-laden find rest, and the sad in heart are cheered by visions of eternal joy. For of every Sabbath, with its hallowed associations, we may say

"Thou art a holy ladder
Whence angels go and come,
Each Sunday finds us gladder,
Nearer to heaven and home."

The great truth then, that God is present in His sanctuary, with His church in its collective capacity, with every assembly of good and pious hearts, just as certainly as He is in the tabernacle above, not made by human hands, is what I desire to impress upon your minds. The "House of God" is not a superstitious phrase. Temples dedicated to the worship of Jehovah, are invested with a grandeur and a solemnity that attaches to no other building. The tabernacle of God is with men. He dwells with them. They are His people and He is their God.

"With fixed yet awful eye,
Turn ye this page of mystery
Nor slight the warning sound;
Put off thy shoes from off thy feet,
The place where man his God shall meet,
Be sure is holy ground."

Long after Solomon's temple was destroyed and when the Jews were exiled in Babylon the promise was given: "Thus saith the Lord God, although I have cast them far off among the heathen, and although I have scattered them among the countries, yet will I be to them as a little sanctuary, in the countries where they shall come." To the same purport are Christ's words: "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." While recognizing the fact that the Father may be worshipped, not only in Jerusalem but everywhere, by those that seek him in spirit and in truth, he put special honor upon the building set apart for communion between man and God. During the feast of dedication, he walked in the temple of Solomon's porch, in courts and cloisters that were dear to the Jewish heart, by touching memories of patriotism and devotion; and in this act, he teaches us, that the highest development of the religious life needs the fellowship of saints, as much as private dealings with the unseen within the veil.

What language then more suitable on this occasion than that of the text: "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting gates, and the King of Glory shall come in." Is this your prayer? Do you expect when the sacrifice is laid upon the altar, that the fire will descend and consume the fire will descend and consume the offering? Are you looking for such a revelation of God's greatness and goodness, as was vouchsafed to the congregation of Israel when His glory so filled the temple, that the priests could not minister at the altar? "According to our faith shall be the realization of our hopes." To those who come into this building with no higher motives than mere conformity with the there can be no spiritual enjoyment, no sense of God's nearness, no display of supernatural power, but to such as come prepared to meet the King and touch his sceptre there shall be given such a rapturous sight of the beloved, and such a blessed foretaste of the beatific vision, as far surpasses human thought. In the magnificent sentence of John Milton, let us then unitedly invoke the presence of the Master of assemblies: "Come forth out of Thy royal chamber, O Prince of all the Kings of the earth! Put on the visible robes of Thy imperial majesty. Take up that unlimited sceptre which Thy Almighty Father hath bequeathed Thee: for now the voice of the Bride calls Thee, and all creatures sigh to be renewed."

Yes the whole creation groans and travails in pain, waiting for the coming of its rightful sovereign. We look for the dawn of that glad morn, when the trump of jubilee shall sound, and when nature and man in unison, shall greet the return of the mighty conqueror of sin and death. Then the sea shall roar, and the floods clap their hands, and the hills be joyful, for the Lord cometh to judge the earth. The dawn of that morn is near. Through the darkness, faint streaks of light in the east indicate a glorious burst of radiance, that will soon usher in the day God. Through the rending heavens the King shall descend and drive out the usurper that now sits upon His throne, and then shall He be glorified with all His saints. The heralds of salvation are hastening on the consummation of the world's redemption. What John saw in apocalyptic vision is now fulfilled. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell upon the earth, and to every nation and kindred and tongue and people. Then shall the earthly sanctuary give place to the Holy Jerusalem the city of the great king.

"No temple there is made with hands,
By human priesthood trod;
Alone, the once-slain victim stands,
The living Lamb of God.

Bright cherubim and seraphim
In one mysterious crowd;
Expand the everlasting hymn,
That rolls from cloud to cloud.

They gaze, and as they gaze, they shine,
And as they shine, admire;
With adoration all divine—
All love—all life—all fire!"

What part shall this congregation have in the coronation of the king of glory? Earth's choicest gifts are all too poor to offer? Be it ours to be found at last among his blood washed saints, casting rich trophies everlasting at Jesus' pierced feet, and saying as we lowly kneel. "Saviour triumphant go and take thy crown, pass through those gates of gold and reign in light."

In conclusion I congratulate this congregation on entering again this house of prayer. I well remember eight years ago, when I first landed in Victoria and some of the good people of this city have had a warm place in my memory ever since. I came as a deputy of the Presbyterian church in Canada to see what could be done in the way of uniting the churches here with those in in the rest of the Dominion. The preacher expressed the prayer and hope that this church, the pioneer of Presbyterianism in this city, would continue to grow and to flourish as years rolled on, and that ere long a new and handsomer building may be raised in which to worship the King, and be the means of bringing joy and peace to many hearts as the old building has been.

In the afternoon the church was again well filled, but this time by a more juvenile congregation, who listened to addresses from Rev. Dr. Reid, Rev. Dr. Cochrane, Mr. Teague and others. The evening service was also largely attended, when Rev. Dr. Cochrane delivered another of his eloquent sermons.

There will be a social to-night which promises to combine the rare qualities of interest and amusement. It is sure to be largely attended.

WITCHCRAFT IN ALASKA.

The Alaska Indians Make a Victim of an Accused Witch.

At a fishery near Wrangel, says the Juneau Record, an Indian was accused of the heinous crime of bewitching other members of the tribe and a short time ago the accused was invited to a feast and after participating of luxuries, such as salmon heads, herring oil, etc., he was loaded up with hoochinoo. As it is the Indian custom to kill all who may be accused of witchery they immediately took steps to kill their guest. He was not sufficiently stupefied by the hoochinoo to be an easy victim. After receiving a severe knife wound the intended victim killed one of the would-be murderers. A general rush was made for him but he succeeded in reaching his hut when he got his gun and came out and defied the entire crowd of savages to come and fight but all failed to respond. Deputy Marshal Millmore, hearing of the affair went to the scene of trouble and arrested the supposed witch for murder, and took him to Sitka, where he was lodged in jail. Among the Alaska Indians to be accused of witchcraft is equivalent to a death sentence.

WHARF AND WAVE.

Jottings of Interest to Marine Men Concisely Compiled.

The steamer Danube is looked for from the north. She is now about three weeks out.

The steamer Walla Walla arrived from San Francisco this morning with 130 tons for this port.

The steamer Mexico arrived from Alaska last evening, and left for the Sound shortly afterwards.

The steamer Costa Rica, which has since the commencement of the Wellington strike been moored in Esquimalt harbor, left Sunday morning for Departure Bay to load coals.

Sewerage Report Adopted.

A special meeting of the board of aldermen was held in the committee room, city hall, Saturday evening, and Mr. Mohun's report on sewerage matters was adopted. One or two clauses were thrown out, but the one pertaining to side standards to the curve of the street lines was left intact.

Not Badly Hurt.

The little eight-year-old son of John Cameron, of Douglas street, met with an accident this morning that became very near being serious. He was riding on a heavy truck over James Bay bridge when he fell between the two wheels. The hind one went over his back, but he got up evidently unhurt although badly scared.

Grim Death Stalks On.

The family and friends of Mr. John Tway, Lake district, mourn the death of Mrs. Tway, who died yesterday at the age of 65 years. The deceased was well known in the district, and leaves a husband, two sons and a daughter. The funeral will take place to-morrow, and will be conducted by Rev. C. Watson at the family residence, near the Royal Oak.

Nearly a Half Century.

Yesterday, November 9th, was the forty-ninth birthday of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. In many British countries the Prince's birthday is observed as a holiday, and the custom once obtained here, but of late years it has fallen into abeyance. The Prince is now in his fiftieth year, and is to-day the most popular heir to a throne in Europe.

P. O. Home.

The orphanage, which is supported entirely by voluntary contributions, has at present about fifty inmates. Increased demand upon the home called for further accommodation which has been completed at considerable expense, and reduced materially the funds at the disposal of the committee. Collectors will make their annual call this week, and we bespeak for this worthy charity a liberal support.

Contradicted.

Mr. Robert Caselton, who was injured some days ago by being knocked down by a team driven by one Marquis, wishes to state that the man has not paid or offered to pay any portion of the doctor's bill. Mr. Caselton has been put to considerable expense over the accident, and is far from well yet, but he does not see his way clear to sue the man whose carelessness was the cause of the trouble. He would like, however, to contradict the statement made, that Marquis was to pay all expenses.

Takes Command.

Captain James Bendrodt, of the tug Pilot, is to leave that vessel and take a position among the pilots of the port of Nanaimo. He has passed the necessary examination for the same. Capt. Jas. Christainsen, son of Capt. Christainsen, of the Lorne, will take command of the Pilot. This is his first command, but as he has for years been familiar with the local waters, and is an old hand at tug boating, there is no doubt that the Pilot will give a good account of herself.

St. Andrew's and Caledonian Society.

Nanaimo and Wellington.

A miner named Jos. Neen was scalded at Nanaimo on Saturday by the bursting of a steam pipe in the mines.

The new Vancouver Coal Co. paid out $100,000 for wages on Saturday.

Several men who were recently paid off and retired from C battery are working in the Wellington mines.

At a meeting of the Wellington miners held on Saturday evening, it was unanimously decided to still stand out.

A lot of young Belgian children who formed procession at Wellington Friday, were stoned by some other juveniles.

The World Enriched.

The facilities of the present day for the production of everything that will conduce to the material welfare and comfort of mankind are almost unlimited and when Syrup of Figs was first produced the world was enriched with the only perfect laxative known, as it is the only remedy which is truly pleasing and refreshing to the taste and prompt and effectual to cleanse the system gently in the Spring time or, in fact, at any time and the better it is known the more popular it becomes.

Poultry and Pet Stock Association.

At the meeting of the Poultry and Pet Stock Association held on Saturday evening at the office of Messrs. Dalby, Ballentyne & Claxton, it was decided to secure the services of Mr. Butterfield, of Buffalo, N. Y., as an expert to decide on the merits of the exhibits. Mr. Butterworth is said to be the best posted man in these matters, available. The forthcoming show is to be made one of the best ever given on the coast, as competitors will come from all parts. The question of having an exhibition of dressed poultry was also discussed, and it is very likely that it will be one of the attractions.

Port Angeles Excursion.

The Port Angeles excursion, projected and engineered by Messrs. Bourchier, Croft and Mallette, was an immense success yesterday. About 250 people boarded the good ship Olympian and proceeded about 10 a.m. to visit the "Rising City of the Sound." The trip over which consumed an hour and 20 minutes, was enlivened by the music furnished by the Queen City band. About six hours were spent at Port Angeles viewing property and the improvements in course of operation. There were also several ladies aboard. On arrival the party were met and taken in charge by a delegation of citizens and councillrs headed by a local band, by whom they were escorted to the hotel and shown every possible courtesy. Vast improvements are in operation and contemplated. Front street, a fine thoroughfare of over 80 feet wide, being graded for two miles or more. The electric lighting system will be started in about a fortnight, and the waterworks will be going inside a month's time. Business is reported in a healthy state, and prospects for the future very bright. The party returned to town by six o'clock after a pleasant day's outing.
